

PROFESSIONAL GDIPS

Our “Type III” GDip programs are designed for individuals who are not already Carleton graduate students. These are stand-alone, direct-entry programs that can be taken part-time:

- Architectural Conservation
- Conflict Resolution
- Curatorial Studies
- Ethics and Public Affairs
- Health: Science, Technology and Policy
- Indigenous Policy and Administration
- Infrastructure Protection and International Security
- Northern Studies
- Philanthropy and Nonprofit Leadership
- Public Policy and Program Evaluation

Please note that you may be able to apply your GDip credentials towards a master’s (or in some cases, a PhD) program.

WHY PURSUE A GDIP?

Are you a professional wanting to upgrade your skill set? Are you a current or prospective graduate student wanting to add extra credentials to your Carleton graduate degree? Why not consider enrolling in one of Carleton University's Graduate Diploma (GDip) programs? Completing a GDip can:

- increase your knowledge and allow you to gain additional expertise in a new subject area;
- complement your existing credentials, providing opportunities for career advancement or career change; and
- bring you into contact with other people who are interested in the same subject area, and allow you to liaise with expert faculty.

Some of our GDips even allow you to study online. Our GDip in Public Policy and Program Evaluation is fully online while our GDip in Philanthropy and Nonprofit Leadership and our GDip in Indigenous Policy and Administration are offered partly online.

GDIPS FOR CURRENT GRADUATE STUDENTS

Carleton University offers two types of GDips. Our “Type II” GDips can be completed by qualified Carleton University graduate students concurrently with their graduate degree programs. Below is a list of these programs:

- Architectural Conservation
- Curatorial Studies
- Ethics and Public Affairs
- European Integration Studies
- Health: Science, Technology and Policy
- Indigenous Policy and Administration
- Infrastructure Protection and International Security
- Northern Studies
